In the left arm, again, he will perceive little change, so that the disparity between the two arms is increased by inspiration. Or, again, let any one, when the power of his right arm is at its maximum, blow out his breath, and the power will gradually dwindle down to the standard of the left arm. As to the sensation by which we become conscious of the increasing or diminishing power of the right arm in the preceding experiments, it is manifestly of the same class as those intrinsic sensations which serve These words are to be understood as addressed to the medical students of the University, before whom this paper was first read. to indicate...
