Excerpt from The National Preacher, and Village Pulpit, Vol. 2: March 1859 There is something more remarkable, and attractive, and impressive, because more hearty, in the scene before us. It is laid in a royal palace, adorned with all the barbaric magnificence and gloomy grandeur of Egypt, the most ancient, and at that time, the most powerful monarchy in the world. Pharaoh and his court are evidently moved with the deepest interest in the group of strangers who are now introduced to the king. They are presented by the prime minister - a youth still, of fair and ruddy aspect, in whose eyes are trembling the tears of filial affection and joy. He leads forward a hoary-headed man, bent, not more with the weight of unusual years, than with the Oppression Of long-eu during and various sorrow. The presentation is not a mere ceremony. The patriarch and his family are come by the monarch's invitation to reside in his land, blessed with the plenty stored up through the forecast and statesmanship of that old man's best beloved child,...
